Afghan Star

After the overthrow of Taliban rule in Afghanistan in 2001, television and pop culture were once again possible for the people of Afghanistan. A television contest to name Afghanistan's best singer was wildly popular, with more than 2000 singers auditioning, and millions watching and voting by cell phone during the weeks of the contest. "Afghan Star" follows the final four contestants, and focuses closely on the two women finalists who bravely compete, even though opposition to women singing in public is so strong among some in the old guard that the women fear for their lives. Entertaining, educational, and inspirational, this film should not be missed!
